2. Identify and treat the cause. Naturopathic Physicians accept that symptoms will normally return except the root cause of the illness is treated. Rather than merely treating the symptoms, they search to find the cause of the issue and educate the patient on the best way to remedy the original issue. Dietary and way of life changes typically play a large part on the remedy process.
3. Disease Prevention. Misery, ache, money and ultimate lives can be saved through practical methods to health. Naturopathic Doctors consider genetics, risk components and susceptibility to disease as a part of their remedy procedure. Obtaining remedy for greater wellness means sufferers shall be much less likely to need therapy for future illness.
4. Treat the whole person. All of us have several parts that make us individuals such as a distinctive emotional, physical, mental, sexual, environmental, genetic and spiritual makeup. A Naturopathic Physician knows that each of these factors influence our total health and includes them in a carefully tailored therapy strategy.
5. Teaching patients. The belief of Naturopathic medicine is that physicians should both be teachers and doctors. Naturopathic Doctors teach their patients how to relax, nurture themselves passionately and physically, how to eat and work-out properly. They work intimately with each affected person and further self-responsibility.
6. First, don't do harm. Lastly, Naturopathic Docs follow three precepts to ensure their patients safety. Utilizing low-risk medicinal compounds and procedures, including homeopathy, herbal extracts and dietary supplements with few unwanted effects. Customizing a treatment plan specific to the person as Naturopathic Medical doctors' respect that we are all unique and heal in several ways. Finally, when possible, do not suppress signs as they're the body's attempt to self-heal. For example, a fever could happen in reaction to a bacterial infection. Fever produces an inhospitable environment for the harmful bacteria and destructs it. When monitored carefully, this can be a helpful occurrence though the Naturopathic Physician would not permit the temperature to get too dangerously high.
